student of anyone not trained on Roke. "Thank you, Father," the boy said. Golden embraced him and left, well pleased with him. The sense of huge strength was draining out of her. She turned her head a little and looked down. She got to work scraping down the inner wall of the house, readying it to plaster. But before the. "She taught me." I jumped back; the possessor of the voice, the fat one with the cap, appeared. I went to one. Where'd he come from, anyhow? Answer me that. "I don't think it's true. I think all the true powers, all the old powers, at root are one." He told Birch that he had received a sending from his teacher on Roke, the Master Hand, and must go at once, on what business he could not say, of course, but it should not take long once he was there; a half-month to go, another to return; he would be back well before the Fallows at the latest. He must ask Master Birch to provide him an advance on his salary to pay for ship-passage and lodging, for a wizard of Roke should not take advantage of people's willingness to give him whatever he needed, but pay his way like an ordinary man. As Birch agreed with this, he had to give Ivory a purse for his journey. It was the first real money he had had in his pocket for years: ten ivory counters carved with the Otter of Shelieth on one side and the Rune of Peace on the other in honour of King Lebannen. "Hello, little namesakes," he told them when he was alone with them. "You and the cheese money will get along nicely." "I couldn't. They'd know. I couldn't even get in. There's the Doorkeeper, you said. I don't know the word to say to him." elaborately woven. Having made a fool of himself on Roke, he had come back to do it all over. "How clever you are," he said. "Have you found better ore than that patch you found first? Worth the digging and the roasting?" thirties, with a blunt face and a pleasant look, dressed plain, though the cob that stood behind. "That was the one thing you could do that I never could. And you never could teach me." He turned and made for the shore, hasty, careless where he set his feet and not caring if he broke. He recognized Hound, though he could not sit up and could barely speak. The old man put his own jacket around his shoulders and gave him water from his flask. Then he squatted beside him, his back against the immense trunk of the oak, and stared into the forest for a while. It was late morning, hot, the summer sunlight filtering through the leaves in a thousand shades of green. A squirrel scolded, far up in the oak, and a jay replied. Hound scratched his neck and sighed. He looked from one sister to the other: the one so mild and so immovable, the other, under her sternness, quick and tender as the first flame of a catching fire. "Master Ivory said I could pass for a man. Though I thought I should say who I was. I will be as. The Changer stared openly at her. He was not as tall as she was. He stared at the Doorkeeper, and. "I asked you not to," he said, "and it's not my need I spoke of. I talk enough for two. Never mind. You'll know what to say when the time comes. That's the art, eh? What to say, and when to say it. And the rest is silence." "There's people all over these parts, and maybe beyond, who think, as you said, that nobody can be wise alone. So these people try to hold to each other. And so that's why we're called the Hand, or the women of the Hand, though we're not women only. But it serves to call ourselves women, for the great folk don't look for women to work together. Or to have thoughts about such things as rule or misrule. Or to have any powers." She looked at him. She could not speak. She stood up and after a moment walked out of the stableyard, off across the hill, on the path that went around it halfway up. One of the dogs, her favorite, a big, ugly, heavy-headed hound, followed her. She stopped on the slope above the marshy spring where Rose had named her ten years ago. She stood there; the dog sat down beside her and looked up at her face. No thought was
